Individual Rights and the General Welfare.

The general welfare can never be promoted by the sacrifice of individual rights. This is contrary to a widely prevalent idea, but it is the truth. It is impossible to separate the general welfare from the individual welfare, or individual welfare from individual rights. The individual is not touched through the masses, but the masses through individuals. Whatever works against the individuals cannot fail to work against the masses.

This is not saying that the circumstances of all individuals must be the same, or denying the neccessity of certain restrictions upon individuals for the public good. It is only denying the idea that the public welfare may be something quite apart and essentially different from individual welfare, so that individual rights might in some cases be utterly set aside under the plea of public necessity. The danger is that people may be "educated" to the point of accepting this idea, and thus the barrier of public sentiment be removed from the pathway of misguided zealots who would stop at nothing in their efforts to bring about certain moral reforms through which they imagine themselves divinely commissioned to save the nation.

Rome was greatest when the individual Roman was most exalted by the privileges of Roman citizenship. England's greatness dated from her Magna Charta, which declared for the individaal rights and liberties of the barons, and marked the dawning of the day of individual liberty for all the people. The United States rose to greatness by giving to the world the Declaration of independence, championing the cause of the individual against the government, which under the plea of the 'general welfare" or any other plea would deprive him of his inalienable rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The love of liberty has ever been the chief factor in promoting national greatness, and the love of liberty is always the love of individual liberty. On the other hand, the denial of individual liberty under despotic governments has always been defended by the plea that it was necessary to promote the welfare of the nation This is the way of the Russian government to-day and of other despotic governments that might be named. In Spain, individual rights have been so long subordinated to the "general welare that the nation is far advanced on he road to extinction and its evident decay is a subject of general comment In every despotic government, the people must sooner or later assert their individual rights through a revolution, or the individual spirit which animates men to perform heroic deeds in the name of liberty must die out under the crushing heel of the oppressor, and decay seize upon the system from which the life spirit has departed.

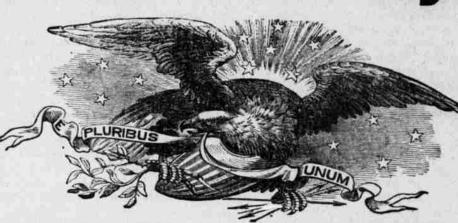

The protection of individual rights s for the individual welfare, and this conservation of the individual welfare lirectly promotes the general welfare. The two can never be in antagonism to individuals, and there is no logical G. W. Marshall. stopping place short of the worst sysems of despotism which the world

The "general welfare" is always the sum total of individual welfare, and the body politic may be affected throughout by the injury done to a single member of it. Deny the rights of one member and a blow is struck at the rights of all. Promote the welfare of one, and the good that is realized flows out in blessing upon others. state of the general welfare must be the natural result .- Sentinel of Liberty.

trusts are prosperous. The politicians like Wolcott, who run with the Hanna-McKinley machine, are prosperous. The carpetbaggers and others who profit by imperialism are prosperous. But the monopoly robbed and tax-ridden people can not be called prosperous so long as an undue share of their revenue is forced from them by unjust laws made to enrich a special class.

If there is naught for the Republican party to be ashamed of-nothing to dim the spotlessness of its record, in the seizure of the Phillippines under cover of false pretenses and by virtue of a bogus title from a whipped and discredited monarchy? nothing to be ashamed of in the erection of an empire in the antipodes as an annex to the republic in the west? nothing to stain its record in the Porto Rican infamy? in the withholding of sympathy from struggling republics and the giving of encouragement and support to the empire that was destroying their Independence? Is there nothing to be ashamed of in the subservience of our foreign relations to England? in the departure from the Monroe doctrine? in the attempt of the administration to force the ratification of a treaty giving England control of an American canal? For these and other sins the Republican party is not facing the dawn of victory, but the night of defeat .- Kansas City Times.

Worse, if Possible, than Drunkenness.

Under the heading, "Drunkenness in Manila." the New York Christain Advocate of the 9th inst. says.

"Through private sources the Advocate has been given a special glance at the liquor evil in Manila, and is constrained to allow other eyes to share the vision. To begin with, our faraway informant seems to be under great constraint lest the military authorities in Manila may find out who it is that's giving out information. The press censorship is very strict, and even the private correspondence of individuals is closely watched." Then follows the evil effects of liquor drinking, especially on the soldiers, many of whom have died of drunkenness and "scores if not hundreds have gone insane" from the use of a native liquor called "vino." But what must be thought of a censorship which is so strict that private individuals do not dare even to have it known that they write to their friends a true statement of the condit-

There can be but one reason for such a censorship, namely, to keep the peoreal conditions in the Phillippines. How much better is this than Spanish methods? But censorship, not only of the press but of private correspondence, is inseparable from military imperialism. If the people will have the "glory" they must pay the price. - The Sentinel of Liberty.
